PREFACE

Ordinarily, it would have been difficult to set a time limit for a work of this nature; but in this case the matter was virtually taken out of the compiler's hands, for the year 1917, beyond which we do not attempt to go, marks the end of a phase of Anglo-German and especially German-American relations that reaches back well into the eighteenth century. With the entry of the United States into the Great War, the English-Germanic rupture was made complete. For more than a year and a half, up to the signing of the armistice in November 1918, all intercourse was terminated, and even after the peace treaty was signed, the resumption of relations was naturally slow and hesitant. Moreover, whatever new international connections are gradually formed will differ in many respects from those that prevailed before. It is the compiler's hope that this book may assist the literary historian to trace the lines of cleavage between the period just closed and that which is to come.

The value of the publication, which in the nature of things will reach only a limited circle of readers and students, has if anything been enhanced by the events which have transpired since its inception. One marked effect of the war was to reduce very strikingly the direct study of German literature in English-speaking countries. Yet at the same time, there can be no doubt that the spiritual upheaval through which the world has passed will lead to a re-examination of Germany's cultural and spiritual contributions to the world of thought, considered from new points of view, along new lines of interest. In all such undertakings, the present work should be a very useful guide to those investigators whose knowledge of German leaves something to be desired.

The work was begun in the fall of 1916 at the suggestion of Professor A. R. Hohlfeld of the University of Wisconsin, who, as scholars know, has long been deeply interested in the literature of translation, and under whose direction several ambitious bibliographical investigations have been undertaken. The present task, however, differed from most preceding studies in the emphasis that was to be placed on the critical side; it was not to be merely an assemblage of titles, but the attempt was to be made to assist the scholar, reader, book-buyer, and librarian to make an intelligent selection from the mass of published translations. It was hoped that publishers who were minded to issue inexpensive series of foreign works in translation would find valuable hints in such a compilation; and it was expected that translators would consult it to find out what had not yet been translated into English, or at any rate not adequately. There is, it must be admitted, something anomalous about an uncritical bibliography of any kind, but perhaps more so in the case of translations: it is surely not feasible to expect each reader to compare version and original for himself, yet unless we know how they stand to each other, the version is useless for any serious purpose. Such guidance has been conspicuously absent until of late years, and in view of that fact we need not be surprised at the vogue of Anster's translation of Faust, and Scott's version of Götz von Berlichingen, or at the inclusion of Margaret Armour's faulty rendering of the Nibelungenlied in Everyman's Library, which had half a dozen better ones to choose from.

The compiler was not so ill advised as to expect that he could pass a really thorough-going critical judgment on all the matter to be included in the book. Many of these titles could be of no conceivable interest to any one in our day: e.g., Sunday school stories (see Nieritz, Barth, Schmidt, and the Fatherland Series in List A), mediocre novels (Marlitt, Heimburg, Ebers, Spielhagen), "adaptations" of third-rate plays and stories. In other cases, originals would not be accessible in the same libraries as the translations. Nor, in view of the enormous material involved, would it be possible to compare each version page by page with the original. Experience showed, however, that very careful examination of a short passage seldom failed to reveal the translator's quality, just as an expert musician can tell by the opening chords of a composition whether it shows promise or not. It was hoped to do this much for nearly all the interesting or important translations that should be encountered.

It must be frankly admitted that this hope could not be realized to its full extent. Titles found in the British Museum were often not to be had in this country; originals and translations were not always found in the same library, or not accessible at the same time. There are consequently regrettable gaps on the critical side. These are in part compensated for by the information afforded in the list of translators (see note prefixed to that list, p. 650.) If nevertheless a complete critical treatment of all important material could not be accomplished, the compiler would beg to forestall adverse criticism by remarking in the first place that, as the Englishman defended his monocle by saying that it did not injure the sight of the other eye, so the presence of sporadic critical judgments does not impair the value of the bibliography as such. In the second place, if the reader or student please, he may regard the judgments here given as thrown in for good measure, and as perhaps paving the way for other detailed treatments of special fields, such as Baumann's of Faust (see B1) or Long's Werther (B13) — both, by the way, models of what such studies should be.

After mature deliberation, it was decided to employ three diacritical marks to indicate the quality of translations. supplementing by comment in certain cases. The double asterisk  indicates excellence. It does not mean perfection, which is no more often attained in translation than in other fields of human endeavor, but implies that a reader may safely take a version so marked as a reasonably satisfactory rendering of the original. The single asterisk * is somewhat more negative in character; it says in effect: I have examined this translation and find it neither wholly good nor wholly bad. Expressed in terms of examination grades, it represents the range between high good and fair. In a collection of lyrics, such a mark means that you may find an excellent version here and there, but you cannot be sure of it, for the bulk of them is in some way or other defective.

The dagger † is comparable to the inverted thumb in the ancient Coliseum, and leads to a brief consideration of those qualities that constitute merit in a translation. Every work of literary art has two component elements: substance and form. By substance we understand the entire substance in its fullest extent—including shades of meaning, connotations, imagery, and the like. The true appreciation of the entire substance calls for an intimate knowledge of the foreign tongue, as well as a thorough acquaintance with the life and customs and literature of the people who speak it. Strangely enough, it is weakness in substance that most often betrays the skilled translator and that necessitates adverse criticism of such talented translators as Mangan, Lytton, and Bowring. Is the modern world growing more modest? Or is it only a passing fashion that dictates the restrictions on translators' license? At all events, it is perhaps not too much to say that Pope's Iliad would be unthinkable in our day, both in its inception and its popularity: people would say, if such a work actually found a publisher, "It's a fine poem, but not Homer" (cf. comment on Rossetti's "translation" of Bürger's Lenore). It is the compiler's conviction that nothing but the consciousness of innate genius can justify the translator in altering by jot or title the substance of his original (except in the way of expurgation, which demands a chapter by itself), and no version is commended in this book which is known to tamper with the matter of its source.

The quality of form is much less tangible, but for that very reason is not seldom caught unconsciously. It includes not only metre, of course, but all those imponderable elements of word-choice and arrangement that we conveniently call style. Style can be ponderous without being heavy, light without being insipid, fluent without being verbose, archaic without being crabbed. It is the translator's highest function to apprehend such qualities in his original and pass them on to the reader of his translation.

The dagger, then, indicates a gross violation of one of these two principles (commonly both), and may be succinctly interpreted as "negligible", or highly unreliable.

Not all the diacritical marks are due to the compiler's own scrutiny: he has very gladly availed himself of the opinions of other critics (see List B, p. 616) and acknowledged his indebtedness; passim.

The titles contained in this book are derived in the main from four great catalogs: British Museum (including the Supplement), Library of Congress (including the so-called Old Catalog), American (Publishers') Catalog, and English (Publishers') Catalog. Some assistance was rendered by students on the British Museum Catalog (*ca.*P-Z), and the two publishers' catalogs (small portions); the rest of the work was done by the compiler in person. The only method available was to go through each list from beginning to end, stopping at each name that looked German, and examining the titles under it to see if any were translations. The magnitude of this task may be gathered from the fact that it took more than 300 hours to go through the LC catalog. This method had at least three disadvantages: it made the compilation of anonyma very largely a matter of chance, it lost sight of MS material almost entirely, and it was open to serious error, due to fatigue or wandering attention of the compiler. But there was no other method to be pursued, and the disadvantages are in part counteracted, in part unimportant. Anonymous and MS material is rarely of high value, so that its loss could be viewed with resignation; lacunæ, on the other hand, had a fair chance of being detected in the process of going over the same ground in another list. In spite of all, however, the present list is undoubtedly defective; proof of this, if any were needed, is to be found in the fact that any special bibliography of an individual or a period always furnished titles found in none of the sources given above.

One problem arose at the very outset of the work, and continued to clamor for a solution up to the very end: the definition of the term "literature." It seemed proper to interpret it liberally, but the question of the place to draw the line was never satisfactorily answered; and it is not improbable that some titles have been lost beyond recall as a result of a restricted plan that gave way to a more liberal one a week later —for consistency is surely one of the most elusive virtues.

Gradually something like a rational plan evolved, and "literature" became defined as "humane letters." The book now aims to include the following: essays, travel and description, German history and biography, history of German literature, history of Greece and Rome, history and theory of art and music, aesthetics, philosophy, and letters (i.e., correspondence). In general, the idea was to list those books which are most likely to be consulted not for professional advantage or information, but for their cultural value and the aesthetic pleasure they afford. For this reason, historical monographs of a highly technical nature were generally excluded, as well as all works dealing with the natural sciences. On other grounds, sermons and other edifying religious literature were not listed, the citations from Luther, for example, being almost exclusively biographical (table-talk, letters). An exception, however, was made in favor of hymns, which so often conform to the highest standards of literary art. It should also be said that the principle of exclusion was much less rigidly applied with respect to the 18th century and earlier periods.

Probably few persons will pick up this volume without a feeling of amazement at the extent of its contents, a feeling which will not be lessened by the realization that the vast majority of these titles fall within 125 years. Yet it would be a mistaken assumption, as a little study will show, that this huge bulk gives anything but a distorted picture of German literature. For one thing, there are included here countless names which no standard history of German literature would even mention: authors of stories for the young, of popular but valueless novels and plays, of travel descriptions and other works that appeal to men's love of the outlandish and remote; on the other hand, many of the very worthy names in German literature have apparently found scanty recognition or none at all in the English-speaking world. One reason for these anomalies, of course, is not far to seek: it is that the publication of translations is to a far greater extent controlled by purely economic considerations than is the publication of native literature. Hence the appeal is much more likely to be made to ephemeral interest, as in the case of popular and sensational novels, or even to freakish curiosity, than to sound concern for genuine literary merit.

It may be of interest to look more closely at the distribution and substance of these lists. The appearance of translations follows closely on the development of the printing into a successful and active business, and we have over a score of translations in the 16th century. The earliest one known to me is the 1509 edition of Sebastian Brant's Narrenschiff. It is followed in 1525 by Hieronymus Braunschweig's treatise on surgery, in 1528 and 1530 by editions of the pranks of Eulenspiegel (see list A), in 1537 and 1538 (and again in 1548) by the comparison of the old and new learnings of Urbanus Rhegius (so B M). In 1545 appears the commendation of matrimony by Agrippa von Nettesheim, and his Vanitie of Artes and Sciences is published in 1569 and 1575. Melanchthon's funeral oration for Martin Luther is included in another work in 1546. In 1550 we have John Carion's The three books of Chronicles, doubtless in the nature of a sermon or the like. Sebastian Muenster is the first of that long line of German travellers and geographers whose works seem to have appealed especially to the English reader. A selection from his Cosmography entitled A treatyse of the newe India came out in 1553, and a collection of extracts appeared in 1572 and was re-issued in 1574. Martin Bucer's treatise on the proper distribution of alms was published in 1557; and it is of interest that his essay on divorce was translated about one hundred years later by John Milton. In 1561 Melanchthon appears again with his biography of Luther, included however in another work; and in the same year is published the life of Zwingli by Myconius, the first of an endless procession of biographies which have re-appeared in English dress. About two years later appear the Common places of Wolfgang Müslin or Meuslin, called Musculus. In 1570 a certain B. Googe "englyshed" a Latin poem Of the Popish kingdome or reigne of Antichrist by Thomas Kirschmeyer called Naogeorgus. The year following saw a version of a document touching the Papal bull against Queen Elizabeth by Heinrich Bullinger. Ludwig Lavater's treatise Of ghostes and spirites walking by nyght etc. was published in 1572 and re-issued in 1596. Another traveler found an English public in 1575, when the (Latin) accounts of Hieronymus Turlerus were published. Two years later we have A Christian confession taken from the last will and testament of Friedrich III, Kurfürst von der Pfalz, called der Fromme. A further oddity is the Declaration made by the archbishop of Collen (Cologne) upon the deede of his marriage, translated and published in 1583 (see no. 1179). The year 1592 practically marks the beginning of the issuance of Faust-books in English, several of which appeared during the following century. ("Practically," since the earlier publication, of which this was a new edition, seems not to have survived.) The first translation from the writings of Paracelsus is dated 1596, entitled 114 experiments and cures etc. Just at the turn of the century appears Thomas Decker's comedy Olde Fortunatus (see list A76).

The 17th century furnishes us with nearly 80 items, with some of which we are already familiar from the 16th century. Thus there are versions of Faust (5), Fortunatus (5), and other works by Agrippa von Nettesheim (9) and Paracelsus (7). Especial popularity was enjoyed by Jakob Boehme, the German mystic, who has no less than twenty items to his credit. In addition, there are translations from Basilius Valentinus, who sought to find the "philosopher's stone," travels by Adam Olearius, Johann Mandelslo, Hermann Kirchner, Johannes Scheffer, and Adam Brand, alchemy by Johann Glauber, and such curiosities as Anton Horneck's wonderful story of certain Swedish witches (see A143), Friedrich Dedekind's Grobianus, the living librarie of Philipp Camerarius, which had a second edition in 1725, a narrative of the death of Wallenstein, a goodly dysputacion by Hans Sachs (who has found very little echo anywhere), the Taking of Alba-Regalis (1601, see A303), and the first version of the old romance of Reynard the Fox (1700, see A254).

The early 18th century shows little advance over the 17th, and in truth there was little in the German literature of that time that would have been likely to appeal greatly to English readers. Of Faust and Eulenspiegel, Reynard and Dedekind, Mandelslo and other travelers there were further editions, with other scattered works of little or no value. One oddity was a little work called the Groans of Germany, which ran through six editions in the year 1741. With the year 1751 we begin to get translations from better known figures of the pre-classic period: we find Rabener, Gellert, Gessner, Bodmer, Klopstock, and Frederick the Great. The freaks of popularity continue here also. Thus a traveller named Johann Keyssler has 12 items (3 editions of a 4-volume work) in the decade from 1751-60, and in the same period Frederick has eight. The names of Goethe and Wieland appear for the first time in the seventies, Lessing in the eighties, but Schiller not until the nineties; Herder, of whom very little has been done, appears in translation in 1801 for the first time. Further analysis of this kind is rendered superfluous by the appended tables, one showing the number of translated items for each decade from 1751 on, the other giving the distribution by authors over the same period. The latter table is made up in a purely empiric way, including only the names of those authors who furnished at least 5 items in each of at least two decades. As the list even then proved too long, certain less significant names were eliminated which only barely came within the self-imposed limit. It might be of interest to cite some of the omitted names. (Unless otherwise indicated, they appear in two decades.) The Sunday school stories of C. G. Barth account for 36 items in four decades, W. Baur's Religious life in Germany during the wars of independence, 14 items; Carmen Sylva, 18 in three decades; Curtius's History of Greece, 16 items; Ernst Eckstein's stories, 14; Nataly v. Moltke (mostly letters), 10 in one decade; G. v. Moser's comedies, 17; Musaeus, 18 in three decades, the first two being fifty years apart; Max Nordau, 33; Ida Pfeiffer's travels, 24; Pueckler-Muskau's travels, 11; Schubin's novels, 15; Sealsfield (local interest in America), 11; Spielhagen, 13; Spillman's Sunday school stories, 9 in one decade; H. v. Zimmerman's aphorisms and reflections, 41 in 3 decades.

The attentive student of German literature will perhaps be no less surprised at some of the gaps in the above list than in many of the inclusions. When such a tabulation fails to show the names of Franz Grillparzer, Friedrich Hebbel, Gottfried Keller, Otto Ludwig, C. F. Meyer, and Theodor Storm, it is clear that the English-speaking public has not been getting a faithful picture of 19th century literary production in Germany.

Analyzing the 19th century by single years, we find the peaks coming in 1845 (over 120), 1882 and 1887 (both over 140), 1902 (over 140), and 1914 (over 180). In the first two cases, these peaks fall in with the curve by decades, whereas the last is neutralized by the violent drop in publication occasioned by the war. Generalization on such matters is always doubtful, and the following suggestions by way of explanation are offered for what they may be worth. As for the peak at the end of the 18th century, it is due to a variety of causes: there was a marked interest in German literature, partly owing to the connections between English romanticism and German Storm and Stress, partly to dawning recognition of the greatness of Goethe and Schiller; Benjamin Thompson in his German Theatre bears witness to English concern with the German drama, notably with the works of Kotzebue; and it is not impossible that we have here one result of England's rejection of the French Revolution, which also encouraged an interest in German life and letters.

The sudden leap from the thirties to the forties suggests a number of considerations. On the one hand, we note a marked slump in the first two decades of the 19th century, which perhaps reflects the economic depression that followed the Napoleonic wars, coupled with some suspicion of German literature as 'revolutionary.' The following rise may be partly due to the economic recovery and the expansive tendency of the new industrial epoch. Perhaps more important is the new wave of interest in German literature, promoted in England by Carlyle, in America by Emerson and the Transcendentalists. The factors affecting the American situation are carefully studied by S. H. Goodnight (German Literature in American Magazines etc., Bulletin of the University of Wisconsin, 1909). He shows that German letters and philosophy enjoyed a marked popularity in this country around 1840, and, which is possibly even more important, were quite as violently attacked in some quarters as they were zealously praised in others.

The peak in the eighties almost surely results directly from the phenomenal rise of united Germany to the rank of a great world-power, and the consequent focussing of the eyes of the world on her affairs. Here enters in also the insatiable appetite of the American public for narrative literature: note in the chart the names of Ebers, Fouqué, Grimm (fairy tales), Hauff, Heimburg, Heyse, Marlitt, E. Werner, Wyss (Swiss family Robinson). Interest in Goethe in this period, so far as such figures attest it, far surpasses that of any other except 1901-10, when there were several issues of large popular editions to swell the total.

The decline in the next period may reflect the growing political tension which was to lead eventually to war. It may also be said that in the previous decade interest had been stimulated somewhat beyond the normal state, thus rendering a reaction fairly certain. The early 20th century again registers a recovery from this depression, due in considerable measure to growing appreciation of Germany's younger and promising writers. Determined efforts to cement friendly relations between Germany and America may also have played their part here. What would have been in the following decade without the war it is of course impossible to say; but it is perhaps not insignificant that the peak in the year 1914 is the highest of all. The number of items drops in the very next year to less than 80, and thence downward to a practical zero after 1917.

As Chart I shows a progressively increasing interest in German literature during the 19th century, so also we find a steady improvement in the quality of the translations as the century advances. This improvement has two phases. On the one hand, translators and publishers become more sensitive to literary judgments, so that there are more translations from the greater Germans, despite such phenomena as the inexplicable popularity of Louise Muehlbach, or the disproportionate exploitation of Fouqué's Four Seasons, Carové's Story without an end, and similar narrative matter. In the last two decades covered by the investigation, we find many of the outstanding figures of German literature fairly well represented: Eucken, Goethe, Grimm's Märchen, Heine, Hauptmann, Mommsen, Nietzsche, Schiller, Schnitzler, Schopenhauer, Sudermann, Wagner, Wyss's Swiss family Robinson. On the other hand, the quality of the renderings themselves improves, as the voice of the critic is heard. Publishers take more pains to ascertain not only whether the original work is of any account, but whether the translator is competent or not. As a result it may be said that with few exceptions it is no longer necessary to put up with bad versions of most of the important monuments of German literature. Most adequately handled, of course, is the novel, and only second to it is the drama in prose or unryhmed verse. Much more difficult of adequate rendition are works like Hauptmann's Sunken bell, Hofmannsthal's rhymed dramas, or Goethe's Faust. Least satisfactory is naturally the field of lyric poetry, where we encounter so much that is strictly "untranslatable", due to the blind accidents of speech and rhyme material in the two languages. Yet even here much can be done with eclectic volumes such as the one of Heine's lyrics edited by Mrs. Freiligrath-Kroeker. It is interesting, by the way, that Heine's verse has fared so much better than Goethe's, a circumstance for which I have no satisfactory explanation.

It is the hope of the compiler that this volume may stimulate the activity of others along various lines: to prepare careful critical bibliographies of special fields, to fill gaps in the translation literature by making new and acceptable versions of hitherto untranslated or badly translated works, and to aid the literary historian in carrying out studies in comparative literature. If it should not only prove really helpful in these ways, but also encourage publishers to issue, and readers and librarians to purchase, none but meritorious translations, its usefulness will have more than justified the very great expenditure of time and effort which it represents.

Due to the very great increase in the cost of printing which confronted the editors of these Studies after the war, the bulk of this book threatened to preclude its publication. At that time (the fall of 1920), the income of the Carl Schurz fund had been accruing since 1915, and there was no possibility of its being used then or in the immediate future for the appointment of a Schurz professor. Moreover, the deed of gift specifically provides that in case it should be found impossible at any time to use the fund for its original purpose, the income should be employed, in the discretion of the Regents of the University, "for advancing the knowledge of German culture and civilization in this country." Under these circumstances the Department of German, feeling that the character of the work brought it clearly within the scope of this provision, recommended that a part of the cost of printing should be defrayed from the accrued interest of the fund. After the Regents had been legally advised that such a procedure might properly be followed, they voted that one-half of the cost of printing the volume, or a sum not to exceed $1,000, should be contributed from the income of the Carl Schurz fund.

MAIN LIST

Explanatory Note: In the main, the catalog of the Library of Congress has been followed in these lists, and pages and formats have been given wherever they were accessible. It should be noted, however, that each of the four main lists has a different system of giving the format. The LC gives it in centimeters of height; the others in Latin abbreviations which originally indicated the folding of a standard sheet of paper, but which now indicate a certain range of heights of volumes. The AC uses letters for this purpose; BM and EC use 8vo, 12mo, etc., but employ a different scale of measurement, so that the same volume may appear as 8vo in the one, and 12mo in the other. Attention should also be called to a curious and often repeated discrepancy in the dating of volumes by EC and BM; the difference is never more than a year, nor is it consistently forward or backward. The serial numbers signify nothing but a convenience in making cross-references; they are not wholly flawless in their sequence, but they do not need to be.

A special note is in order with regard to LCO. In the spring of 1917, when the compiler worked at the LC, there were still upwards of 200,000 cards in the Old Catalog, representing some volumes that had not yet been recatalogued, and so did not then appear in the printed cards of LC. Numbers of these cards, however, represented volumes that had been lost in the meantime, and that therefore never will appear in the printed catalog. For this reason it seemed advisable to distinguish such titles.

The following library abbreviations are used in brackets: AC, American (Publishers') Catalog; EC, English (Publishers') Catalog; BM (British Museum); BMS, British Museum Supplement; HCL, Harvard College Library; LC, Library of Congress; LCO, see above; BPL, Boston Public Library; NY, New York Public Library; NL, Newberry Library; ABP, American Books in Print (1912); B1 etc., titles in list B; CU, Columbia University; UW, University of Wisconsin. Sometimes the bracketed symbol will be AC1, AC2, etc. In such cases the number refers to the volume of the American Catalog, the earlier volumes of which frequently omitted the year of publication; this device is adopted to localize a given book which is listed without a date, and to assist bibliographers in verifying references. For convenience, the dates of the AC are here given: AC1, 1820-52; AC2, 1852-5; AC3, 1855-8; AC4, 1858-60; AC5, 1861-6; AC6, 1866-71; AC7, 1872-6; AC8, 1877-84; AC9, 1884-90.

Other abbreviations are: Tp., typed; Tr., translated by; l., leaves; pt., parts; il., illustrated; rev., revised; ad., adapted; sel., selection, selected; cor., corrected; enl., enlarged; fl., flourished; abr., abridged; ca., circa, about.

The word do signifies identity of the German original; same means identity of the translation. References such as A1 and C1 are to special appended lists in this book. In general, italics are used for critical judgments and comments of the compiler.

For abbreviations of English names see note to list of translators, p. 22.

WYSS, J: Rd. 1781-1830

(J. D. W. is author of "Der Schweizerische Robinson." J. R. Wyss revised the MS and had it printed. Jeanne Isabelle Polier de Bottens, baronne de Montolieu, translated the work into French, but added a better ending; also she translated rather freely. Her additions have been variously accepted by German publishers, and appear in the most popular English editions.)

LIST OF TRANSLATORS

NOTE.—This list serves in the main a double purpose. On the one hand it has its face value, so to speak: on the other, it will partly make up for deficiencies in the critical apparatus of the main list. Thus if a book is translated by E. A. Bowring, for example, the reader can get an approximate idea of its quality by consulting this list and noting the ratings assigned to other translations done by him.

LC cards generally give translators' dates, and these are given here; BM however gives no dates, and many of them were not readily accessible. In order to give some idea of the translator's period, the publication date of the earliest translation recorded in this book is given in parentheses after the name, with A, E, or G prefixed, to indicate publication in America, England, or Germany respectively.

The numbers, of course, refer to the main list, and to lists A (p. 591), B (p. 616), and C (p. 619), and are assigned mostly the same diacritical marks as are found in those lists. Occasionally a double mark is here given, to indicate varying quality of the translator's work, as determined by examination of particular selections.
